PREFACE.

The rapid growth of our village during the lapse of four years, (since the issue of the last Directory in 1850,) renders it expedient that a Directory should be published, and that with great care. In order to accomplish this, the Publisher was compelled to introduce the use of numbers, which he is happy to say, has been almost universally adopted, rendering it an easy task to define the residence of each and every citizen.

In some instances numbers have not been put upon houses, the occupants or owners not having ordered them, but in all streets where numbers are used, each house has its number located, to be given in the Directory, and which can be obtained at any time at the office of the Publisher.

The Directory will contain a Map of Watertown, North Watertown and Juhelville, giving the names and location of many new streets recently laid out, which will be found of great utility in connexion with the Residence Directory.

The inhabitants of Watertown, North Watertown, and Juhelville have become so intermixed in business and residence relations, that it became necessary to arrange the Directories for the three villages in one volume.

This being the first full register of Watertown, its compilation has been attended with great labor and much inconvenience, inasmuch as the numbering of the village had never been previously undertaken, and has therefore fallen entirely to the care of the Publisher.

A few errors may probably have occurred, owing to the difficulties attending the undertaking, which will, it is hoped, be overlooked by a liberal public, before whom it is respectfully placed by its greatly obliged and humble servant, THE PUBLISHER.

HISTORICAL SKETCH ## OF # WATERTOWN.*

JEFFERSON COUNTY, which was set off from Oneida on the 28th of March, 1805, is embraced in that tract of land which was purchased of the Oneida Indians and a part of the Six Nations, at the Fort Stanwix treaty, concluded in 1787, between those tribes and commissioners on the part of the state of New York. By this treaty, all the lands lying between the Oneida lake and the river St. Lawrence came into the possession of the State; with the exception of a tract ten miles square, being a reservation made by the Indians, for a Frenchman, by the name of Peter Penet. The tract taking its name from this individual, was called "Penet Square." Upon this lot of land, the lines of which were to run on the four cardinal points, and one corner to touch the river St. Lawrence, the state engaged to issue a patent to Penet, as soon as he should become a citizen Having made application for a certificate of naturalization, he received it the day upon which he started for Europe, where he had been suddenly called. Previous to his departure, however, he gave to a Judge Duncan a deed in trust of the whole tract, with the power of attorney to receive the patent. Under this power, Judge Duncan did afterwards obtain the patent, and make sale of the land. But subequently, certain circumstances having raised various questions of title, which produced an unsettled state of opinion among the purchasers, they suffered the land to be sold by the comptroller for taxes. This settled all difficulties, by securing new and valid titles from the State.

*The Publisher is indebted to the History of Jefferson County, and two former Directories, for a portion of this sketch.

The largest portion of the land north of Black River, was purchased of the State, and sold to settlers by a Mr. Leray; who, from a mistaken notion of indulgence, forbore to enforce collections of the purchasers, as their payments became due, until the principal, with the accumulated interest, exceeded the value of the lands. This occasioned the removal of a large number of the first settlers, and the re-sale of their possessions to others. This has never been the case in any part of Watertown.

Of the territory which was ceded to the State at the Fort Stanwix treaty, Alexander McComb, in 1796, purchased, at the rate of eight cents per acre, 3,600,000 acres; embracing, among others, the towns of Ellisburg, Rodman, Watertown, Hounsfield, Stows, Champion, Rutland and Henderson. These townships were purchased of McComb,—Ellisburg by William Constable, Rodman by Richard Harrison and Josiah Ogden Hoffman, Watertown by Nicholas Lowe, Hounsfield by Ezra Hounsfield, Stows, Champion and Rutland by Isaac Bronson, and Henderson by William Henderson.

Such was the proprietorship of this territory when settlements commenced in Watertown, in March, 1800, at which time Henry Coffeen and Zachariah Butterfield, having the fall previous visited the town and purchased farms, removed with their families from Schuyler, Oneida County, and began improvements on the site of Watertown Village. Coffeen was the first to arrive, having penetrated from Lowville through the woods, with his family and household goods drawn on an ox sled.

He erected his hut on what is now the north-west corner of the Public Square, near the American; and Butterfield settled on the ground now occupied by the Merchant's Exchange, corner of the Public Square and Washington Street.

Coffeen was a man of strong mind, possessed an enterprising spirit, and was not altogether free from ambition. He, as indeed was the case with most of those who, with him, here first broke the solitude of the forest, was actuated in his enterprise by the motives which often induce immigration into new countries. He felt a consciousness of the possession of native energies and resources, equal if not superior, to those whom fortune, by hereditary wealth or some other factious circumstance, had placed above him; and was convinced that the most practicable way of placing himself in that rank which his talents and powers qualified him to occupy, was to plant with his own hands the seeds of a new colony, incorporating his interests with its earliest infancy, in the assurance that by its growth his own prosperity would be secured, and ultimately his enterprise acknowledged and appreciated.

Persons of less sagacity and forecast than the first settlers of Watertown, would hardly have selected its present site for planting a village, or even for any individual settlement. The ground was extremely uneven, rocky, and broken; the soil wet, and apparently unproductive. A deep ravine crossed the Public Square from the foot of Franklin Street in a north-easterly direction, which was nearly, if not altogether, impassable, except on foot. Even at the present time it is apparent, after immense expense and labor in grading, that the whole surface of the land here, then presented a much more rugged and forbidding aspect, than did the lands on the banks of the river either farther above or below. But this was more than counterbalanced in the discerning minds of Coffeen and his companions, by the immense hydraulic power appropriable from the numerous falls and rapids of Black River at this point. In this, as well as the richness and fertility of the adjacent country, the abundance of good building timber, and the great facilities for the prosecution of extensive business operations, they wisely believed that they discovered the elements of future prosperity and greatness.

In 1801, one year after Coffeen and Butterfield had located themselves here, they were joined by two immigrants from the town of Windsor, Vermont—Hart and Isiah Massey. Mr. Hart Massey built his log house near the place now occupied by the Black River Bank. Watertown being on one of the routes of communication between lake Ontario and the central part of the state; and having become a common centre for the meeting of those negotiating the sale and purchase of land, public accomodations became necessary, and Isiah Massey, in 1802, opened the first tavern, on the ground where now stands the store of D. D. Otis.

The high reputation of Black River country began now to be sounded abroad, and the number of settlers in Watertown was steadily and rapidly augmenting.—The years 1801,—2,—3, witnessed the arrival on the ground of Aaron Bacon, Jonathan Cowan, two brothers by the name of Thornton, Jesse Doolittle—a blacksmith, M. Canfield—a shoemaker, and Aaron Keyes—a cooper. In two or three of the succeeding years, among others, D. Huntington, Wm. Smith, John Paddock, Chauncey Calhoun, Philo Johnson, and John Hathaway, united themselves with the little settlement.

The enterprising mechanics and agriculturists in Watertown did not long allow their hydraulic privileges to remain unimproved. In 1803 Jonathan Cowan built the first grist mill.

This was an invaluable acquisition to the place, as it relieved the inhabitants from the necessity of traveling to a great distance for the flouring of all their grain. It was, as a matter of course, destined to supercede the rude engine, heretofore employed in the work of grinding, or rather pounding, the Indian corn of the settlers. A notice of this may not be uninteresting; for, although a piece of machinery much more simple and primitive in its construction and operation than the complicated productions of more modern ingenuity, it equally illustrates the invention of the American, and his power of adapting himself to the circumstances of his situation.

This instrument consisted of a large maple stump, (which was located directly in front of what is now known as Washington Place,) so hollowed by the axe and fire, as to contain a considerable quantity of corn. Above this, vibrated a long piece of timber—its centre resting upon a crotch, in the form of a well-sweep—allowing one end to play immediately over the corn. To this was attached a heavy weight, which, by being raised, and allowed to fall with full force upon the contents of the stump, soon reduced them to a preparation for the "samp-kettle." If this very primitive grist-mill found a superior in its successor, it possessed over it at least two advantages. First, those who availed themselves of its assistance, were not laid under the contribution of toll; for it was a piece of property in which all were considered stock-holders, with equal shares.—Second, its location and construction rendered it admissible for the industrious and enterprising wives of the settlers, who had not then been blessed with an initiation into the mysteries of modern refinement, to superintend its operation. This they generally did, while those for whose special benefit the work was going on, were making the forest vocal with the repeated blows of their sturdy axes.

The business of the little community increased as their number augmented, and soon demanded some medium of disposing of the products of their industry; accordingly in 1805 a store was opened by J. Paddock and Wm. Smith, their goods being brought from Utica in wagons. An idea may be had of the hardships of that period, compared with modern facilities, from the fact that in March, 1807, seventeen sleighs, laden with goods for Smith & Paddock, were twenty-three days in getting from Oneida County to Watertown, by way of Redfield. The snows were in some places seven feet deep and the valleys almost impassable, from wild torrents resulting from the melting of snows. The winter had been remarkable for its severity, and the destructive spring floods.

In 1803 the first bridge across Black River at Watertown, was built at the foot of Court Street, by Henry Coffeen and Andrew Edmunds, over which the State road afterwards passed, and in 1805, the dam was built below the bridge, at which, the same year, a saw mill was built on the north side, and in 1806 a grist mill by Seth Bailey and Gursham Tuttle. A saw mill was built on the Watertown side by R. and T. Potter, a little below, and a saw and grist mill soon after by H. H. Coffeen, since which time many mills have been erected along the river. The year 1807 brought with it the accession of a paper mill built by Gurdon Caswell, and a brewery by Gursham Tuttle.

At this period, and for a considerable time after, the manufacture of potash was an object of much attention with those who had land in their possession. The high price which this article then commanded, and the fine adaptation of the timber and the soil, to the production and the preservation of ashes, rendered it one of the most lucrative branches of business to which the settlers could devote themselves. As every barrel of potash yielded the manufacturer twenty-five dollars, the purchasers of lots, by their characteristic enterprise and prudence, were enabled to realize a sum fully equal to the first cost of their lands, from this article alone.

The principal commercial operations in the year 1806—'7, and '8, consisted in the exchange of goods for potash, which took place between the agricultural portion of the community and the merchants before mentioned. The amount of exchanges thus effected during this period was not inconsiderable, when we consider the limited number of persons engaged in the transaction. In 1806 it was not less than $3,500; in 1807, about $6,000; and in 1808 it exceeded $9,000.

The first Cotton Factory which reared its form in this village, is still standing, and known as the "Old Cotton Factory,"—now under the proprietorship of the Watertown Cotton Company.

It was erected by a company, and went into operation in 1814. The machinery was manufactured by James Wild, of Hudson, much of which is still in use; and although cotton machinery has been much improved by twenty-five years experience, few cotton-factories do more or better work. This establishment was succeeded in 1827 by a similar one, erected by Levi Beebee, upon the Island which bears his name. It was, however, on a much more extensive plan; being a building 250 feet in length, 65 in breadth, and four stories high; built of limestone, of the most substantial character. This building was designed to receive 10,000 spindles; and half that number, with 128 power looms, had been put into it, when it was destroyed by fire in 1833. It was erected, and thus far completed, at an expense of $120,000, employed a great number of hands, directly and indirectly, and its destruction gave a shock to the village of Watertown, from which it did not soon recover. The ruins still stand, frowning upon a majestic and beautiful cascade; whose waters leap past them, as if in terror, lest the columns of ragged stone should precipitate themselves upon their bosom; or, as if in haste to escape from the gloom and sadness of their presence. They also remain a monument of the enterprise and public spirit of their proprietor, who died at Cleveland, Ohio, Sept. 19, 1838.

In the early settlement of the county, strenuous efforts were made to fix the county seat at Brownville. General Jacob Brown was appointed one of the commissioners by the state, to lay out and open two roads; one from Utica, through Boonville, to some point on Black River; and one from Rome, through Redfield, to the same point. Brownville was fixed upon as this point. Every exertion was then put forth by those interested, and every argument pressed, which the circumstances of the case, policy, and ingenuity could supply, to effect the location of the county seat at that place.—The commissioners who were to designate the site of the court house, decided, however, upon placing it at Watertown. But by way of compromise they selected its present site, then quite remote from the village.

The first court-house was built in 1807, by William Rice and Joel Mix; its erection was superintended by William Smith. It being thus placed at a distance from the centre of the village, had a tendency to draw attention, and induce settlement in that direction.—Another circumstance had a considerable influence in fixing the location of mills and manufactories remote from the common centre; Mr. Jonathan Cowan was the owner of all the hydraulic privileges here, at the point where his mills were situated. From a mistaken belief as to the best method of stimulating industry and enterprise, he refused, on all occasions, to sell, without limiting the purchaser to one kind of business. The spirited settlers would not brook this fetter upon their enterprise, and determined not to submit to the restriction, so long as the waters of Black River were free. This policy caused the erection of the dams above and below that of Cowan's. Although, for a time, this appeared to check the growth of the village, it ultimately operated to its advantage, by enlarging its sphere of action, and more fully developing its resources.

The manufacture of iron into castings and machinery, has for many years been carried on to a considerable extent in Watertown, the first machine shop being built by N. Wiley, in 1820, and the first foundry by R. Bingham.

The first tannery, on an extensive scale, was erected here by Jason Fairbanks, in 1823, which having been burnt, was rebuilt in 1833.

Black River, within the distance of a mile, passes over four dams, at each of which are numerous establishments, but at none of them is the full amount of water power used. The facility with which dams can be constructed, and the security that can be given to buildings erected upon them, from the bed of the river being solid rock, gives additional value to these privileges. The four dams were built in 1803, '5, '14 and '35, and none of them have been materially injured by the spring floods.

It is generally the case, that in planting new settlements, a very early attention to the cultivation of the intellect and moral powers of the community, is prevented, by the arduousness of the duties and the engrossment of mind incident upon their condition, as well as their remoteness from institutions of learning and the great centres of literary and moral influence. In Watertown, however, as early as the year 1811, efforts were made for the establishment of an academy. A piece of ground was given for this purpose by Mr. P. Keyes, near where the First Presbyterian Church now stands. A building was commenced the same year, and completed in the following–1812–simultaneous with the commencement of the last hostilities between Great Britain and the United States. The declaration of war occasioned the stationing of a garrison of soldiers in Watertown, who, finding the Academy building conveniently situated for Barracks, took possession of it, and occupied it for that purpose.

The project of the Academy was in consequence abandoned. After the evacuation of the building by the troops, which took place in 1814, it was taken down, and the materials of which it was composed transfered to what is now known as Clinton street, and erected into a school house. This for some time was employed for the purpose designed. The land thus left vacant, according to a condition in the deed given by Mr. Keyes, could be sold by appraisal. A part of it was thus sold and a part went into the possession of the First Presbyterian Church.

With this failure, however, the efforts for the accomplishment of the truly noble design, did not cease. Another commodious academy building was erected a few years after, upon the street which has taken its name from this circumstance. This academy was opened under favorable auspices, and for a considerable time prospered flourishingly. But although the noble stone edifice still stands in its beautiful and sequestered location, as an abode of learning it is now superceded by the Black River Literary and Religious Institute,—corner of State and Mechanic streets,—a school most deservedly popular, an ornament to the place, and an honor to its conductors and patrons.

The religious opportunities of the inhabitants of Watertown, for the first few years, were necessarily limited. For the purpose of public worship, they were accustomed often to assemble at the dwelling of some one of the little community, to hear read a sermon, from the pen of some excellent New England divine: and whence, no doubt, many a petition went up to Him who "regards not the condition of men," as fervent and acceptable, as if uttered in the stately temple embellished with cornice and damask. They were occasionally visited by an itinerant minister of the Methodist connection, but seldom by any others. The place was regarded as proper missionary ground, and the work of proclaiming to the inhabitants the "Word of Life," as demanding the exercise of as much benevolence and self-denial, as is now required in him who would carry the Bible into the savage regions west of the Rocky mountains. This is well illustrated by the remark of a benevolent-hearted herald of the cross, while on his way to the settlement here; being asked whither he was bound and what was the object of his mission, he replied, "I am going to preach to the heathen." In 1803 a church was organized by the Rev. Ebenezer Lazel--Presbyterian in its confession of faith, and Congregational in its form of government. The first Presbyterian clergymen located here, were, successively, the Rev. Messrs. Leavenworth, Porter, Cook, and, immediately after the war, Mr. Banks. As the population of the place increased, bringing together, of necessity, persons of various religious sentiments, churches of the different persuasions were organized, from time to time, until the village now embraces two churches of the Presbyterian denomination; two of the Methodist Episcopal; one of the Wesleyan Methodist; one of the Baptist; one of the Episcopal; one of the Universalist, and one of the Roman Catholic, all occupying attractive and commodious houses of worship.

In the early years of the village it was remarkable for nothing, perhaps, more than the union and harmony of its inhabitants. Common dangers, privations, and labors, begat a community of interests and feeling, and actuated to a mutual reciprocation of assistance and benefits. The prosperity and joys, as well as the griefs and misfortunes, of one, were shared by all. Death never invaded their number, without throwing a gloom over the whole community, and touching every heart with affliction. The melancholy circumstances attending the first instance of mortality, afforded great occasion for the exercise of these sympathetic feelings.

Late at the close of a still, sultry day in summer, Mrs. Thornton, the wife of one of the young settlers, gave the alarm that her husband had not returned from the forest, whither he had gone in the afternoon to procure a piece of timber for a particular purpose. Immediately every man in the settlement answered to the call, and hastened to the place designated for meeting to concert a plan for search. Here all armed themselves with torches of lighted pine knots or birch bark, and calling every gun in the place into use for firing alarms and signals, started out, in small companies, into the forest in all directions. After a search of several hours, the preconcerted signal-gun announced that "the lost was found." All hurried to the spot; and upon the ground where now stands the Black River Institute, crushed beneath a tree which he had felled, lay the lifeless body of their companion. He was laid upon a bier, hastily prepared for the occasion, and conveyed through the gloom of midnight, by the light of their torches, back to his house. What must have been the emotions of the bereaved young widow, when the mangled corpse of her husband, so suddenly fallen a victim to death, was brought in and laid before her! She did not, however, mourn alone. As the remains were bourne to their resting-place,—the first grave that was opened in Trinity Church-yard—it needed no sable emblems of mourning to tell the grief which hung dark around every heart. Each one of the little company, as he returned from performing the last duties to his departed companion, felt as if from his own family one had been taken.

A similar incident occured, a short time after, in the death of a child, which was killed by the falling of a tree, on the present site of the Court House; thus designating with blood, as one can imagine, the location of the halls of Justice and Science in our village, and consecrating the ground of each by a human sacrifice.

To any person who realises what a dense howling wilderness, this country was, at the time of its first occupation by our fathers, it will not be surprising that there were instances, rather frequent, of persons being lost in the woods. The following, from the pen of Solon Massey, Esq., is one among the many:—

"Capt. James Parker owned and occupied a large body of land (now a farm) on the Brownville road, at present occupied in part by his son James. He had a large family of sturdy boys, the oldest of whom, at the time our tradition dates, was fourteen to sixteen years of age. The old gentleman, like many others of our enterprising settlers, was clearing up a large farm, and, for the purpose of making the most out of his ashes, had small potash works, where he worked them into potash or black salts.

In the process of manufacture, it seems he wanted some hemlock gum, and at the same time wanted some groceries from the little place ycleped a store here in the village. So handing the hero of our story a silver dollar, he bid him take his axe and a bag and on his way to or from the store to procure some gum. With this errand and equipment he started, after dinner, on his way to this place; he proceeded as far as the foot of the Folts Hill (H. H. Coffeen's late residence), where, stretching away to the south was an abundance of hemlock timber, and intent on performing the hardest and most difficult part of his task first, and not wishing to risk losing the dollar, he struck his axe into a large tree and loosening a chip he carefully deposited the coin in the cavity between the loosened chip and the body of the tree for safe keeping, intending to come back to that starting point with his axe and bag, and leave them there in their turn, while he run up to the store and back.

Well, after a while he found himself sufficiently provided with gum, and started off at a kind of Indian lope for the place where he had left the dollar, passing in his way a spring of water, upon the surface of which was a thick yellow scum, resembling iron rust. On, on, on he traveled, sweating under his load, and with the lurking suspicion that something was wrong, he didn't know what. After a good while, however, and when he knew he must have traveled more than any distance that could possibly have been between the last gum tree and the one containing his dollar, he made a full halt for the purpose of a reckoning. One thing was very certain—that he had traveled faster coming back than when going, and had been longer about it. That had a bad look! then he thought it curious there should have been three of those iron ore springs, looking so nearly alike! And finally, the more he soliloquized the more he satisfied himself that he was lost.

What added not a little to his perplexity was, that twilight was already spreading her mantle upon the forest. It would therefore be necessary for him to select where he would spend the night, so far as there was any choice of a sheltered placé in the woods. He was not long in finding a large standing tree that afforded just the nook he wanted, between two roots that stood well out on either side, and having ensconced himself in a sitting posture, with his back against the tree, and the axe between his knees, he prepared to face any danger that might offer, and to sleep away the long hours of night. He would have telegraphed the folks at home that he was safe, if he could. He hoped they would not be much alarmed. But they were though, and after sunset the old gentleman got uneasy and started out the way that he should come, just to meet him—if he was safe—but with a kind of presentiment, to succor him if in trouble. He kept on, occasionally stopping to listen, and sweating with apprehension, and imagining a whole catalogue of mishaps that might have befallen him—whether he had lost his way—or had maimed himself with the axe—or a tree had fallen upon him—or, what was certainly possible, some ravenous wild beast had devoured him—all was a matter of painful doubt, fear, and uncertainty.

It was not, however, until after he had reached the village, and found by enquiry that his boy had not been there, that his fearful forebodings of some horrid evil were confirmed.

Giving the alarm here, and begging of the good people to rally quick and meet such persons as he should succeed in obtaining from Brownville, he hastened home in such a state of mind as can be better imagined than described.

Until his arrival home, the family had not partaken very much of his own alarm, but now, what a sad and sorrowful company are they, as hurriedly they make the necessary preparation, with pine knots and birch bark torches, horns and guns for signals and refreshments for the missing boy, if he should be found, and for the kind neighbors who were in all probability to be in the woods all night.

In due time, a large company of men and boys were assembled, and having organized into bands, with preconcerted signals, they struck off into the forest, while the mother and sisters of the missing boy sat in the open door of their lonely tenement to await the slow and tedious result, and so as to be in a situation to catch the first sound of any signal guns announcing the fate of him they loved.

Thus passed the first half of the night. The hunt proceeded with great fidelity, so that every rod of the ground was inspected, the horns sounding at regular intervals of time, so as to preserve the line of march, or to catch the ear of the boy if peradventure he was alive.

The party had proceeded on carefully, until within a few rods of where the hero of the play kept his night vigil, before his dreams were disturbed and he sufficiently awake to know that it was for his benefit that the horns were sounded; but when fairly awake, he was not long in vacating his quiet retreat, and arresting the further progress of the search, by presenting himself in propria personæ, with his axe on his shoulder and gum bag under his arm, before the satisfied cavalcade.

Bang! bang! BANG! rung out in quick succession upon the night air, reverberating to each extremity of the long line of weary hunters, the preconcerted signal, which notified the quick ear of the listening mother and sisters that the lost was found. There was more joy manifested that night over the boy that was found than over all them that went not astray."

Watertown has been repeatedly devastated by fires, some of which produced a decided check to its prosperity, while others acted beneficially, by removing rubbish that would, otherwise, have disfigured the village for time indefinite, and from which the place recovered with an elastic energy, characteristic of a progressive age and people. The following catalogue shows the dates and places of the principal fires since 1832:—

On the 7th of Feb. 1833, a fire occured, which burned the extensive tannery and oil mill of J. Fairbanks; the paper-mill and Printing-office of Knowlton & Rice, and a morocco factory and dwelling of Kitts & Carpenter, on Mill street; loss about $30,000.

July 7, 1833, Beebee's Factory was destroyed by fire; loss $200,000, insured 25,000.

December 22d, 1841, the Black River Woolen Mills, at Factory Square, were burned.

March 21st, 1848, at 3 o'clock A. M., a fire occured in an old stone shop on Mill street, which consumed a large number of buildings, together with the bridge to Beebee's Island. Two men named Leonard Wright and Levi Palmer, perished in the attempt to rescue property.

May 13, 1849, a fire occured in the rear of the American Hotel, which consumed over one hundred buildings, comprising most of the business portion of the village, being the most disastrous fire which has ever occured in Jefferson County.

September 24, 1850, a fire occured in a small dwelling house on Sterling street, from which the burning shingles were wafted to the steeple of the Universalist Church, which was soon consumed; but, through the prompt exertions of the firemen, the flames were there checked.

January 27, 1851, Perkins Hotel, on the site of the Merchants Exchange, was burned, with a large block on Washington street, adjacent; loss $25.000.

October 16, 1852, a fire occured on Washington St., near the entrance to the Arcade, which consumed all the blocks between Washington Place and Stone street; loss $14,000.

November 5, 1852, Mechanic's Row, on River street, near Mill street, was consumed by fire, which threw from fifty to sixty mechanics out of employment; loss $20,000; insured between $6,000 and $7,000. A young man named Hudson Hadcock perished in the flames, in consequence of the falling of machinery.

July 23, 1853, the Foundry, Machine Shop and Car Factory of Horace W. Woodruff, in North Watertown, near Beebee's Island, was consumed by fire, together with all its contents. About seventy men were thrown out of employment by this calamity.

December 11, 1853, a fire occured which consumed the sash and butter tub factory of Messrs. Farnham and Button, on Beebee's Island, adjoining the South Bridge.

Several fires have occured recently, which would have undoubtedly laid the most of our village in ashes, had it not been for the invaluable Water Works with which it is now most bountifully supplied, rendering it but the work of a moment to extinguish the ravishing flames.

The systematic business forecast of our citizens has, in almost every instance, provided against these appalling calamities. In the great fire of May 13, 1849, long before the smoke and flame of the devouring element had ceased, preparations were making to replace the buildings that had been consumed, by nobler structures. The funds accruing from insurance enabled the work to be prosecuted with immediate and unabated energy, and in most instances without invading the fixed capital of the owners of the property. The blocks of stores, and beautiful residences, built during the past four years, are splendid monuments of the good taste and public spirit of the proprietors. Few places can boast of buildings of the same character, equally ornamental; arising from the ashes like magical creations, they attest in a striking manner, the native and spontaneous resources of our village, and its ability to repair almost any conceivable disaster.

The native resources of Watertown and the surrounding county are fast becoming available, through the medium of various railroads completed, and in the course of construction. The completion of the Watertown and Rome Railroad in 1852, gave to the business of Watertown a new impulse, by opening a speedy communication between this place and the great central thoroughfare to New York; and northward to Cape Vincent and the Canadas.

The completion of the "Sackets Harbor and Saratoga," and "Potsdam and Watertown" Railroads, will open a new era, marked by an increase of existing branches of business, and the creation of new fields of industry and enterprise. Those great works accomplished, and Watertown will be practically within a few hours of the emporium of New England, while to New York and the Great West we have already easy and speedy access.

The auguries of the future are bright. It only requires that the same industry in the pursuit of business, the same enterprise and forecast, the same liberality and amenity between our different business interests, which have laid the basis of our present prosperity, be ever adhered to, to give assurance of a still more gratifying, as it will be, an enduring success. Then, as heretofore, our village will rise superior to every calamity and continue to be a growing monument of American business sagacity, energy, enterprise and intelligence.

RAILROADS.

WATERTOWN & ROME RAILROAD.

This company has a Charter "to construct a Railroad from the Village of Rome to the Village of Watertown, and from thence to the River St. Lawrence, or Lake Ontario, or both; at such point as the Company may select."

Length from Rome to Watertown 72 miles; from Watertown to Cape Vincent 25 miles.

CAPITAL STOCK, $1,500,000.

DIRECTORS,

Wm. C. Pierrepont,—President,.....Pierrepont Manor
O. V. Brainard—Vice President,.....Watertown

John P. Yelverton,..... "
John C. Cooper,.....Adams,
Willis Phelps,.....Springfield, Mass.

JOB COLLAMER, Superintendent

DANIEL LEE, Treasurer.
R. M. HUNGERFORD, Receiver.

This Road connects with the Sackets Harbor and Ellisburgh Railroad at Pierrepont Manor, 16 miles in length, and with the Potsdam & Watertown Railroad at Watertown, 76 miles in length. It has 21 stations, including the Rome, Watertown and Cape Vincent termini. The distances are as follows:—

| STATIONS, | miles NORTH. | miles SOUTH. |
|---|---|---|
| Rome | 00 | 97 |
| Taberg | 11 | 86 |
| McConnelsville | 13 | 84 |

| Chaumont | 86 | 11 |
| Three Mile Bay | 89 | 8 |
| Cape Vincent | 97 | 00 |

The Time Tables are made to correspond with changes on the Central Railroad and Lake Ontario. As a general rule four through trains pass each way every 24 hours. Two exclusively for passengers—one freight and passenger—one freight alone—several other trains for way freight daily pass over the southerly half of the road.

POPULATION OF WATERTOWN.

By a careful estimate of the average number of souls to each name in a Directory, and a comparison of the last census of 1850 with the rapid growth of the three villages, Watertown, North-Watertown, and Juhelville, the present population can be safely estimated at about 8,000.
